Four EAP Referral Types

- 1. Self-referral
- 2. Informal Supervisory
- 3. Formal Supervisory
- 4. Mandatory Supervisory

1. Self-referral

- Any employee may contact BHS to seek information, schedule an appointment or discuss a personal problem.
- A self-referred employee seeking assistance can do so with complete privacy.

ASSISTANCE

2. Informal Supervisory Referral

- Used when a supervisor notices a change in an employee's performance and/or mood and encourages the employee to consult the EAP for help
- A supervisor can informally refer an employee to the EAP by:
 - Promoting the EAP services as a resource; Informing the employee services are free and confidential
 - Strongly encourage the employee to contact BHS
 - Remind the employee that a professional can assist them with whatever problem is affecting his or her performance

3. Formal Supervisory Referral

- Used for an employee whose once acceptable performance is deteriorating and have already tried making an informal referral
- Formal referral examples include:
 - Distracted, not focused at work
 - Sharing personal stressors at work
 - Decline in work performance
- Used as a resource for the employee to improve their work performance before disciplinary action is necessary

4. Mandatory Supervisory Referral

- All mandatory referrals must go through your human resources (HR) department prior to any communication with your employee.
- Used when there is a serious policy violation or risk of termination due to unchanged behavior.
- Mandatory referral examples include:
 - Continued documented decline in job performance
 - Continued job-related incidence after disciplinary action
 - A single serious job-related incident
 - Circumstance where an employee's actions are deemed to be a risk to the welfare of the employee, other employees, or to the public.
